stepped aboard and asked 'where is my laundry?'

"The Captain has gone to see about it," answered the steward. "It is not the Captain's but the steward's to look after the laundry," said Hyde-Mansfield. In an angry tone he continued the steward to do so. "You are a liar," shouted the actor, growing red in the face. "Get your clothes and get ashore at once or I will blow you full of holes," he ran into the cabin and reappeared with a gun which one of the crew says was a seventeen-shot repeating rifle. "I am the man," said Hyde-Mansfield, pointing the gun directly at his head and held it there until he packed his clothes and got ashore. "I came on board and demanded what was the matter," he said. "The steward discharged by the new owner, who has threatened to shoot me. Look out, or he will shoot you," cried the steward.

"Oh, I guess not," said I. "Well, you get your clothes and get ashore, too, or I will shoot you," shouted the steward.

"Oh, I guess you will not shoot anyone," I replied. "Take off that suit of clothes, which belongs to me. Pack your grip and get ashore at once, or I will blow you full of holes," he shouted. Hyde-Mansfield then took a position in the cockpit with the gun between his knees, and ordered all hands ashore.

Capt. Kirk says he told the actor that the suit was his and he would keep it on. The captain and crew hastily packed their clothes and left the yacht. Hyde-Mansfield then took a position in the cockpit with the gun between his knees, and ordered all hands ashore.

DIED AS GOOD NEWS CAME.

Frederick Augustus Schroeder, a Bellevue Patient, Had Just Heard from His Lost Sister.

"AND THE SINS OF THE FATHER," &amp;c.

Taken from Home When a Child, He Never Knew Her History Until a Man, and Then He Fell Ill with Grief.

Frederick Augustus Schroeder died in Bellevue Hospital yesterday. It was grief and worry which precipitated consumption, the disease of which he was ill, and it was joy and excitement over the final smoothing away of his life's troubles which hastened his death.

Schroeder was born at No. 16 Liberty street, Cincinnati, thirty years ago. His father, for whom he was named, was a tailor doing a prosperous business. He had a sister two years younger, and the poor fellow often told the hospital nurses with tears of the days when he and the little girl played together.

One afternoon twenty-five years ago the boy and girl were romping in the yard in front of their house. Mr. Schroeder called them to the gate—an unusual thing for him to get home from the shop so soon—and said they both were to go with him. The children were just about to leave the yard when Mrs. Schroeder called to little Annie from the window. The child responded and went into the house, but the father and brother did not wait for her. And so it happened that Annie never saw her father and brother again.

Schroeder, senior, took his son to a railroad station, where they were met by Mrs. Louisa Hoffer, a seamstress, who had worked in the tailor shop. She had her little girl with her and the four boarded a train for New York City. Young Frederick was told that Mrs. Hoffer was really his mother, that the woman they had left behind was only an aunt and that the new little girl was his sister whom he had never seen and whom he must love like he did the one at home. When they reached New York they went to Harlem to live. Schroeder establishing his tailor shop in the neighborhood. He did fairly well at first and the new life was a happy one. The boy and girl, never doubting that they were of the same flesh and blood, were sent to school, and in the eyes of the neighbors the Schroeder family was a model household.

But luck finally came, and as the years wore on the tailor lost in business. He and the woman for whom he was happily together at first, more than twenty years had passed since they left the West, and each was nearly sixty. About two years ago, old man Schroeder fell ill and died. He carried secret with him, six years old man Mrs. Hoffer-Schroeder was visited with a fatal sickness, and just before she passed away she told the big man, who had always regarded her as mother, the whole story of the flight from Cincinnati. Among her details, she told him how she had destroyed a photograph of himself taken with his mother when he was a baby.

Frederick was overcome by the revelation, and the consumption, which was hereditary, began to manifest itself soon
